

To Promote Independence for People with Developmental Disabilities,

the Stevens Center listens to the people it provides service to. We try to provide support in a way that meets the needs and desires of the person being assisted. Individuals who receive services through the Stevens Center are encouraged to select the support people that will work with them, how and when support will be provided, and how the budget will be administered.

We help to open doors to brighter futures, where people with developmental disabilities are an active and contributing part of their community.

Through Sandhills Center, the Stevens Center provides NC Innovations services (formerly known as CAP) to families in Lee, Harnett and Moore Counties. We also provide IPRS developmental therapy and personal assistance. Qualification for these services is made through Sandhills Center. After you have been qualified, you may select the Stevens Center to be your provider agency.

The services provided by the Stevens Center are home and community based. Our goal is to support the individual with a disability in their independence, and in their role as an active member of the community.
